Select a potato to play the following roles: Daniel, the King, the Attendant; and then divide the remaining potatoes into a group of Daniel's friends and a group of "other captives."

Read the following story, as the kids use the potatoes to act it out.

"Daniel and his friends were taken as prisoners of the king, and they were placed in a special training center at the palace, along with some other captives. One day, the king told his Attendant to bring the captives some fancy food from his own table. The Attendant went to Daniel, his friends, and the other captives with the food. Daniel and his friends looked at the food carefully, smelled it, and then decided not to eat it because it was food that God had told the Israelites not to eat. The Attendant was scared that the king would punish him if Daniel and his friends weren't as strong as the other captives who were happily eating the food. But Daniel made a deal with the Attendant, that if he and his friends ate just vegetables and water for 10 days and were not as healthy as the others, he would take the consequences. So, the Attendant went to the king and after 10 days they inspected the prisoners. Daniel and his friends were much stronger and faster and healthier than all the others! So the Attendant was not in trouble and arranged to give the men vegetables and water for their whole stay and the king was so impressed with the health of Daniel and his friends that he gave them special jobs in the palace. Daniel knew what God said and so he stood up for what was right."
